SEMINAR 1, 20 JAN 2011, THU, 4.30PM – 6.00PM

SEMINAR ROOM 3, LEVEL 3

The Arctic

The Arctic has received considerable attention over the past few years, partly because of the littoral States' claims to extended continental shelves, and partly because of the effects of the receding Arctic ice.

This seminar will introduce the situation in the Arctic, and examine the supporting legal considerations. Matters to be covered include terminology, geography, maritime zones, maritime boundaries, extended continental shelves, routes used for international navigation, the IMO's Arctic work program, the Arctic Marine Shipping Assessment, negotiations for an Arctic search and rescue agreement, and unilateral regulation in the Arctic.

SEMINAR 2, 21 JAN 2011, FRI, 4.30PM – 6.00PM

EXECUTIVE SEMINAR ROOM, LEVEL 3

Developments in Jurisprudence on Sovereignty

Rights to maritime zones depend on establishing sovereignty over the land from which those zones are generated. In Southeast Asia and elsewhere, there are many islands over which there are competing sovereignty claims. As a result, these disputes hinder relations between States.

This seminar will review developments in jurisprudence on settling sovereignty disputes, drawing on the cases involving sovereignty disputes over islands. Matters to be covered include, as a matter of background, distinguishing between islands, low-tide elevations and submerged features; their maritime zones; and considering what sovereignty means for these features. A number of these disputes will be identified. The seminar will then identify the various rules and factors used for deciding competing sovereignty claims that have been set out in the decisions of international tribunals and arbitrations over the past 80 years. Attendees should then be equipped to apply these rules and factors in undertaking future work on appraising disputes of interest.
