

ASEAN Law and Policy

Notes for Teachers

This course is designed as an introduction to ASEAN Law and Policy to equip students with the fundamental concepts, working knowledge, and skills necessary to navigate the complex world of ASEAN integration. Employing a cross-disciplinary approach, it may be taught at the senior year(s) of undergraduate studies or as a post-graduate module for the disciplines of law and the social sciences.

For more higher-level courses and specialist knowledge on ASEAN Law and Policy, please refer to the annual NUS Centre for International Law's ASEAN Law Academy – Advanced Programme, an intensive masters-level course for policymakers, academics, and practitioners.

While this syllabus and materials are free for use, we kindly request you acknowledge any use to “ASEAN Law Academy, Centre for International Law (NUS)”

Overview

The Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) is not only important to its ten member states – Brunei, Cambodia, Indonesia, Laos, Malaysia, Myanmar, Philippines, Singapore, Thailand, and Vietnam – it is also a multilateral arrangement other countries seek to engage with, whether for security or economy. ASEAN has facilitated the region's peace and security and, increasingly, its economic significance vis-à-vis Asian powers (e.g. China, India, and Japan) and other global powers (e.g. the US and the EU).

After cooperating for 40 years under an ostensibly informal status and flexible modality, eschewing an overt reliance on the law, the ten members adopted the ASEAN Charter to radically transform the organisation into a tri-pillared (political-security, economic, and socio-cultural) Community based on the rule of law and rule of institutions. Members' objectives via this Charter-based transformation into a rules-based system are manifold: a meaningful presence in the international community, wield significant leadership in the regional order vis-à-vis external players, a trade bloc that plugs into global supply chains, and equitable development for ASEAN citizens. The ASEAN Community was established at the end of 2015, and its next phase of rules-based growth mapped out in a new roadmap stretching to 2025.

This course examines the new discourse of ASEAN law and policy. and its intersection with national and international law and politics, the management of power relations, and the metamorphosis of ASEAN into a contemporary international (regional) organisation. It deals primarily with Law (of course) but is also attentive to the Non-Law and Quasi-Law aspects inherent in ASEAN's character as an international person, its values and principles, and its operational modalities, processes, and institutions.

Learning outcomes

With the ever-increasing reach and impact of ASEAN – and this will intensify given the pressures of the COVID-19 pandemic and bipolarity in international politics – basic knowledge of ASEAN law and policy will be helpful to those in the public and private sectors within and without the region.

Knowledge

Students will get a good grounding in ASEAN Law and Policy (and the core essentials of public international law). More importantly, as this course straddles the realm of international law and international relations, students will understand:

1. How international and regional events, powers, politics, and strategic relations impact upon and shape ASEAN's Laws and Institutions;
2. How Law is important in ASEAN, and where Non-Law or Quasi-Law is even more important;
3. How various actors – states, public institutions, private corporations, civil society, and individuals – can effect regional and state-level changes in ASEAN.

Skills

As law is also profession- and practice-oriented, this course is geared towards honing practical capabilities. Students will learn:

1. How to spot legal issues
2. How to write substantive legal arguments concisely yet comprehensively
3. Intellectual dexterity
4. Creative yet logical problem-solving

This course will also provide students a glimpse into the varied opportunities that might appeal to them involving ASEAN law and policy: international law, diplomacy and foreign affairs, trade, security, strategic, and economic development.

Teaching style

The nature of ASEAN Law and Policy is wide-ranging and comprehensive, requiring considerations from law, politics, and governance, especially since geopolitical changes occur frequently. (There is no stopping how the world wants to act! Thus, ASEAN must be prospective and reactive.)

Hence, this is a rigorous course that demands mental dexterity, adequate preparation, and the willingness to come to class to discuss openly. The seminars employ Socratic methods centred around discussion questions. Everyone's input will enrich our learning experience as there is no monopoly on ideas and strategies – I will help shape your input into legally-sound and logical arguments. (There should be NO expectation of a single straight answer in class – generally those who engage in international law and international relations negotiations as such will be rather surprised...)

While those who have studied international law might have a slight edge, the course is structured such that the playing field is levelled. Participants who have read and thought about the materials provided for each lesson (capped at a manageable number of pages) and engage in the class benefit the most.

Due to the pandemic, classes will be held virtually. The modality is as follows:

- A. Short Video of about 20 min (viewed at own time)
- B. Seminar reading list with questions (readings to be done at own pace; seminar questions should be an approximately 30 min exercise)
- C. Virtual classroom discussion (1.5h max)

Annex: List of topics and provisional reading list

[Note: The materials below will be excerpted to make a reasonable reading list (circa 30 pages) for each class. As geopolitical situations can be quite fluid, the fact-patterns from news sources will also change accordingly.]

Part 1: Overview and General Concepts

1.1 Overview of Course

1.2 Introduction to principles, concepts, and institutions necessary to understanding regional law and regional organisations (and international law and international organisations more generally) vis-à-vis ASEAN

1.3 ASEAN, the Political Creature (1967–2007)

- The history and evolution of ASEAN (1st 2 phases of development)
- The raison d'être of ASEAN and its morphing purposes
- The ASEAN Way – norms, values, and principles (diplomatic/political/non-legalistic), Westphalian mindset, absolute sovereignty
- The institutions of ASEAN and their development
- The modus operandi of ASEAN

4. Regional Governance and Institutions in ASEAN

- The governance modality – ASEAN as an international/regional organisation vs. ASEAN as an aggregation of member states
- Organisational efficacy or institutional mimesis
- Decision-making in ASEAN – consensus, ASEAN minus X (economic matters)
- The institutions and agencies in ASEAN carrying out the laws and policies, especially the ASEAN legal department in treaty interpretation and clarification
- The legal role and powers of the ASEAN Secretary-General and the Secretariat vs. those of the Committee of Permanent Representatives and the Member States

5. Securing Compliance with ASEAN Law

- Why do states obey international law? Why would ASEAN states obey regional law?
- ASEAN's dilemma – ensuring compliance for both hard and soft law
- ASEAN's ideal solution – dispute settlement and monitoring mechanisms
- Dispute settlement mechanisms
 - Functions of dispute settlement mechanisms – can they truly compel compliance?
 - Specific provision in instrument or general provision in ASEAN Charter
 - Activation of dispute settlement procedures and processes towards resolution (state-to-state modalities – what about private parties/individuals?)
 - How and why dispute settlement modalities tend to vary according to the Community pillar (E.g. security, economic, socio- cultural matters)
 - Effectiveness and Improvements
- ASEAN monitoring mechanisms
 - Specific provision in instrument or general provision in ASEAN Charter
 - Monitoring procedures and processes, including self-monitoring (e.g. AEC Scorecard)
 - Hierarchy of powers among those who have oversight
 - Effectiveness and Improvements

6. ASEAN Law in National Regimes

- Implementation of international and regional law in national regimes
- Monism (direct effect) and Dualism (ratification, transformation, incorporation)
- Case studies of three ASEAN member states with regard to different types of ASEAN law – incumbent reality and future potential
 - Singapore (dualist – all ASEAN laws)
 - Indonesia (ostensibly hybrid; the role of judicial creativity)
 - Cambodia (direct effect for human rights treaties)
- The impact of ASEAN law in national regimes – when having the law is not good enough and necessitates other considerations
 - Domestic rule of law and good governance
 - Properly functioning civil institutions
 - Human and financial resources

Part 3: Substantive Legal Areas

7. ASEAN and Security (1) (Pillars 1 and 3: Political-Security and Socio-Cultural)

- The development of a 'Caring and Sharing' and 'People-centred' ASEAN
- Why human rights and democracy are included as part of ASEAN's legal transformation – influences from individual member states and civil society stakeholders vs. the eventual claw-back
- Human rights in ASEAN – only in the Political-Security and Socio-Cultural Communities and not the Economic Community?
- The ASEAN human rights system (to be illustrated with case-studies):
 - Primary (and overarching) regional mechanism ASEAN Intergovernmental Commission on Human Rights (AICHR)
 - Special Regimes – ASEAN Commission on the Promotion and Protection of the Rights of Women and Children (ACWC); ASEAN Committee on the Implementation of the ASEAN Declaration on the Protection and Promotion of the Rights of Migrant Workers (ACMW)

- Powers and competences; guiding instruments and how international law has shaped them; promotion and protection of rights; competition and overlaps among regimes; exhaustion of remedies and potential of individual recourse
- Interplay between national, regional, and international protections

8. ASEAN and Security (2) (Pillars 1 and 3: Political-Security and Socio-Cultural)

- Evolution of ASEAN as a security community to the Political-Security Community – has anything changed?
- Norms – non-interference, amicable relations, peaceful resolution of conflict
- Modalities – culture of abstinence, consultation, confidence-building measures
- Institutions and Balance of Powers – the ASEAN Regional Forum and external powers
- Where does Law fit in? Treaty of Amity and Cooperation, Bali Concord II, ASEAN Charter
- Military Security (i.e. when the Use of Force or the threat thereof is involved) – intra-regional conflicts (e.g. Temple of Preah Vihear); conflicts with an external dimension (e.g. South China Sea)

- Human Security – Humanitarian intervention and disaster management (e.g. Aceh, Cyclone Nargis, treatment of ethnic minorities and Rohingya in Myanmar)

11. [EXTRA TOPIC] ASEAN the international/regional organisation in comparative context

- ASEAN aspires to be an upstanding international legal person. How does it differ from 2 major international organisations? Examination of influences from the UN and EU in terms of laws and institutions upon ASEAN (e.g. Charter, Community, etc.)
- Comparative analysis of the institutional structure and powers of ASEAN relative to the UN and EU
- Comparative analysis of ASEAN's legal regime and its powers relative to the UN and EU – Is there the rule of law in ASEAN? How is it different from or similar to the rule of law in the UN and EU? Is it a hybridised system?
- The Rule of Law (and not the rule of might) – the extent to which these regimes are able to regulate (and prevail over) unequal power relations. Is ASEAN an effective regulator of intra- and extra-regional powers?
