

So You Want to Write About International Law . . .

José E. Alvarez

Venues for Scholarship:

Practitioner-oriented publishers

NGO/Think Tank Reports

Student-edited and Peer Review Journals (specialized and general)

Book chapters in edited books (e.g., Oxford Handbook on X)

Scholarly books (for general or specialized audiences);

Treatises/Casebooks or other books designed for classroom use)

Types of publishers:

University Press Houses; Large publishers (e.g., CUP, OUP, Brill, Routledge, Springer); smaller houses (e.g., Hart and Edgar)

AJIL

American
Journal of International
Law

INSIDE THIS ISSUE

- The Transformation of International Law
Ruth Mason
- International Transformative
Constitutionalism in Latin America
Armin von Bogdandy and René Urdano
- Current Developments:
Brexit, the EU-UK Withdrawal
Agreement, and Global Treaty
(Re-)Negotiations
Jonistark

American Society
of International Law

CAMBRIDGE
UNIVERSITY PRESS

AJIL Unbound

VOL. 111

April 2017-March 2018

CONTENTS

PAGE

Symposium: Framing Global Migration Law

- Introduction to Symposium on Framing Global Migration Law
Jaya Ramji-Nogales & Peter Spiro 1
- The Possibilities of Global Migration Law
Peter Spiro 3
- Moving Beyond the Refugee Law Paradigm
Jaya Ramji-Nogales 8
- Transnational Mobility, the International Law of Aliens, and the Origins of Global Migration Law
Frédéric Mégret 13
- The Architecture of International Migration Law: A Deconstructivist
Design of Complexity and Contradiction
Vincent Chetail 18
- Toward a Global System of Human Mobility: Three Thoughts
T. Alexander Aleinikoff 24

Symposium: Revisiting Israel's Settlements

- Introduction to Symposium on Revisiting Israel's Settlements
Jose E. Alvarez 29
- The Missing Argument: The Article that Changed the Course of History?
Eyal Benvenisti 31
- Understanding the Settlements Debate
Pinna Sharvit Baruch 36
- Settlements in the Supreme Court of Israel
David Kretzmer 41
- Resistance to Military Occupation: An Enduring Problem in International Law
Adam Roberts 45
- Israel's Creeping Annexation
Omar M. Dajani 51
- Taking the Settlements to the ICC? Substantive Issues
Yael Ronen 57

Contemporary Practice of the United States Relating to International Law

Edited by John R. Crook

United States Threatens Military Strikes Against Syria, Then Joins in Diplomatic Efforts to Control Syrian Chemical Weapons	900
D.C. Circuit Rules Statute Authorizing "Israel" as Place of Birth on Passports of Citizens Born in Jerusalem Is Unconstitutional	907
Florida Highway Patrol Will Observe Road Traffic Treaty and Not Enforce Conflicting State Statute	910
Solicitor General's Brief in Bond v. United States Defends Missouri v. Holland	912
Second Circuit Rejects Argentina's Immunity Claim in Action to Confirm ICSID Award	914
New York Supreme Court Addresses Immunity of Heads of International Organizations	916
U.S. Clothing Retailers Adopt Factory Safety Plan for Bangladesh	918
U.S. Executive Order Addresses International Trafficking in Wildlife	924
United States Endorses Results of UN Negotiations on Transparency and Confidence Building in Outer Space	926
United States-New Zealand Proposal for Marine Protected Area in Ross Sea Fails to Win Required Unanimous Approval	928
Second Circuit Affirms Orders Requiring Argentina to Treat Restructured and Holdout Bondholders Equally; Argentina Seeks Certiorari in Related Extraterritorial Discovery Case	930
United States Supports New Treaty to Facilitate Visually Impaired Persons' Access to Books	933
Ecuador "Suspends Support" for U.S. Andean Trade Promotion and Drug Eradication Act	935
U.S. Government Responds to Poor Working Conditions in Bangladesh's Garment Industry	936
U.S. Court Sentences New Hampshire Resident for Lying About Her Participation in Rwandan Genocide to Secure U.S. Entry and Citizenship	939
U.S. Court Sentences Somali Pirates to Life Imprisonment for Murder of Four Americans	940
U.S. Department of Justice Pursues International Cybercriminals	941
White House Document Outlines Standards and Procedures for U.S. Use of Force in Counterterrorism Operations	943
U.S. Supreme Court to Review D.C. Circuit Decision Vacating Bilateral Investment Treaty Award Against Argentina	946
Brief Notes	947

Contemporary Practice of the United States Relating to International Law

Edited by Kristina Daugirdas and Julian Davis Mortenson

Congress Overrides Obama's Veto to Pass Justice Against Sponsors of Terrorism Act	156
U.S. Federal Court of Appeals Upholds United Nations' Immunity in Case Related to Cholera in Haiti	162
U.S.-Russian Agreements on Syria Break Down as the Syrian Conflict Continues	170
Russia Suspends Bilateral Agreement with United States Disposal of Weapons-Grade Plutonium	181
The United States Makes Payment to Family of Italian Killed in CIA Air Strike	188
United States Ratifies Hague Convention on the International Recovery of Child Support and Other Forms of Family Maintenance	191

Impact of the Web:

Progress of an Idea:

Tweet

Short/long 'blogs' (e.g., Opinio Juris; Just Security; AJIL Unbound; EJIL Talk!)

Public Policy Journals

Think tank/NGO Report

Published article/book chapter/book

Spin off tweets (see above) – rinse – repeat

Impact on Scholarship:

Adverse: See, e.g., Joseph Weiler, Editorial: Publish and Perish, 29 EJIL 673 (2018)

The West Bank and International Humanitarian Law on the Eve of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Six-Day War

Overview of attention for article published in American Journal of International Law, May 2017

SUMMARY

Title The West Bank and International Humanitarian Law on the Eve of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Six-Day War
Published in American Journal of International Law, May 2017
DOI 10.1017/ajil.2017.10
Authors Theodor Meron

Twitter Demographics

The data shown below were collected from the profiles of 129 tweeters who shared this research output. Click here to find out more about how the information was compiled.

About this Attention Score

In the top 5% of all research outputs scored by Altmetric

MORE...

Mentioned by

- 10 news outlets
- 2 blogs
- 1 policy source
- 129 tweeters

Citations

- 10 Dimensions

Readers on

- 12 Mendeley

What is this page?

Geographical breakdown

Country	Count	As %
United Kingdom	22	17%
United States	10	8%
Australia	3	2%
Israel	2	2%
Chile	2	2%
Canada	2	2%

Demographic breakdown

Type	Count	As %
Members of the public	120	93%
Scientists	6	5%
Science communicators (journalists, bloggers, editors)	3	2%

Switzerland	2	2%
Palestine, State of	2	2%
Mexico	1	<1%
Other	14	11%
Unknown	69	53%

Mendeley readers

? The data shown below were compiled from readership statistics for 12 Mendeley readers of this research output. Click here to see the associated Mendeley record.

Geographical breakdown

Country	Count	As %
Unknown	12	100%

Demographic breakdown

Readers by professional status	Count	As %
Student > Master	4	33%
Student > Ph. D. Student	3	25%
Other	2	17%
Professor > Associate Professor	1	8%
Unknown	2	17%

Readers by discipline	Count	As %
Social Sciences	4	33%
Arts and Humanities	2	17%
Computer Science	2	17%
Medicine and Dentistry	1	8%
Unknown	3	25%

Attention Score in Context

? This research output has an Altmetric Attention Score of 208. This is our high-level measure of the quality and quantity of online attention that it has received. This Attention Score, as well as the ranking and number of research outputs shown below, was calculated when the research output was last mentioned on 15 August 2020.

ALL RESEARCH OUTPUTS

#86,934

of 15,850,207 outputs

OUTPUTS FROM
AMERICAN
JOURNAL OF
INTERNATIONAL
LAW

#1

of 577 outputs

OUTPUTS OF SIMILAR AGE

#3,134

of 268,432 outputs

OUTPUTS OF
SIMILAR AGE
FROM
AMERICAN
JOURNAL OF
INTERNATIONAL
LAW

#1

of 8 outputs

Altmetric has tracked 15,850,207 research outputs across all sources so far. Compared to these this one has done particularly well and is in the 99th percentile: it's in the top 5% of all research outputs ever tracked by Altmetric.

This page is hosted by Altmetric on behalf of Cambridge University Press.

Trajectory of an Article in peer-review journal: EJIL

Number of article submissions: about 300-350 per year; of which some 250 are rejected (usually at preliminary 'screening' stage without being sent to peer review)(average time: up to 6 weeks).

If sent to peer review, submission must be withdrawn from other journals for consideration. Peer review (up to 6 months!)

Author gets Accept/Reject/Revise and Resubmit (most common) or Category 4: promising but needs general overhaul.

Once accepted (usually after revisions) goes into pipeline to be published (but can result in further 4 months delay).

Result: can take up to 12 months from initial submission to physical publication – hence newly adopted possibility: pre-publication on line for accepted articles in final edit; also no objection to pre-publication in unedited/non-final form in SSRN or comparable websites (e.g., University 'working paper' series).

Those subjected to peer review but rejected get 3-4 page detailed comments/suggestions for improvement.

Trajectory of An Article: AJIL

AJIL: 350-375 submissions per year. Exclusive submissions not required but if exclusive get expedited consideration.

Review initially undertaken by 7 student submission editors who write memo on MS strengths and weaknesses and recommend whether to accept, accept with revisions, or reject (average time: 5 days!).

Co-editors in chief then decide whether to send to double blind peer review (need at least 2 affirmative votes of AJIL board to accept) (average time: 2-3 weeks!).

Numbers in first six months of 2018: out of 194 MS submitted

MS with board review and final decisions: 12 (6.19%)

Accepted after revise and resubmit: 6

Rejected after peer review: 6

Rejected as inappropriate: 116 (59.79%)

Rejected without Board review but screened: 66 (34.02%)

Note: majority of MS that are rejected get feedback, including sometimes detailed reviews (particularly if sent to peer review; many sometimes be urged to contribute to AJIL Unbound)

Common Reasons for Rejection of Article Submissions:

- (1) Wrong subject for particular law review (e.g., foreign law topic submitted to AJIL)
- (2) Wrong audience (e.g., practitioner-oriented piece as lead article for AJIL)
- (3) Wrong style/format (e.g., an 'editorial' for AJIL where editorials are restricted to members of AJIL board)
- (4) Pre-emption/lacking in novelty
- (5) Poor research (e.g., insufficient grounding in relevant literature)
- (6) Absence of a clear thesis
- (7) Failure to answer predictable counters to thesis
- (8) Poor writing (e.g., poor English grammar, poor organization, informal writing)
- (9) Insufficient source support
- (10) Other

Remedies: CUP Tips for Authors/other journal options

Typical Suggestions for Revisions:

Need more research on X

Need more depth of discussion or develop arguments on X

Need more care in expressing arguments on X

Grammar/style/citation issues

Greater attention needed to counter-arguments on X

FACTS and FICTIONS:

Most articles in peer-reviewed journals like AJIL are written by academics (65 percent in 2018, last year as co-editor in chief of AJIL)

Much fewer articles (22 percent) are written or co-written by students (but see International Decisions, Book Reviews)

About same number (27 percent) are written or co-written by practitioners

The largest percentages (29 % and 11 % respectively) of articles in AJIL are written by authors based in the US and the UK

Most popular topics (circa 2017) of published articles in AJIL: international economic law (e.g., trade/investment); international legal theory; international criminal law; and law of armed conflict.

Least popular topics: African/Asia-Pacific/Latin American/East European perspectives; law of culture/gender/development.

Tips for first-time journal authors from Cambridge University Press and the American Journal of International Law

The American Journal of International Law (AJIL) encourages early career scholars to submit their work to the journal and has put this advice together in support of this.

Selecting a topic

- Consider the most interesting areas that have arisen in your research
- Remember several shorter pieces may do your work more justice than a book
- Read widely around your research area to see what is topical and what others are writing on
- Consider testing your topic at a conference before writing a full article
- Discuss your ideas with colleagues

Choosing an appropriate journal

- Read widely to give a clear sense of which are the relevant journals to your research field
- Read the scopes of journals carefully (often outlined inside a journal or on its webpages). If your article does not fit the scope of a journal it will likely be immediately rejected (AJIL's scope focuses on public international law and closely related issues of global governance, transnational law, and national or sub-state law)
- Ask colleagues which journals they recommend for your particular topic
- Consider what kind of audience you are hoping for – if a large audience is important than a generalist journal might be most appropriate; if you want to reach those most interested in your field, then a specialist journal may be the best way to go
- If your piece is particularly innovative or provocative, look for journals that have a tendency to publish these kinds of work
- Keep in mind that there are some journals that particularly favour early career scholars – look out for journals that offer a junior scholar's prize (e.g. AJIL's Francis Deák Prize)
- Is ranking important – check with colleagues whether your school has its own ranking list of journals and whether Impact Factor is important? Law is a field with few ranking lists but those that seem to count most are the Clarivate Journal Citation Reports that publishes Impact Factors, Scopus' SCImago list and Washington and Lee's law journal rankings (AJIL is the highest ranking international law journal on these lists)

Deciding what type of content you wish to write

Remember that you are not limited to writing just research articles and for a first publication you may want to submit a shorter piece of content. For example, AJIL does not just publish lead articles and you may also want to consider:

- Submitting a short Current Developments or Notes & Comment piece

- Proposing writing an International Decision piece commenting on a recent court or tribunal decision to section editor David Stewart
- Suggesting a book you would like to review to section editor Richard Bilder who solicits all book review content
- Considering submitting a piece to AJIL's online companion AJIL Unbound which publishes short essays (of no more than 3,000 words) written in a readable style accessible to policymakers, practitioners, and students

Writing your article in a way that is more likely to be published

- Write in clear English
- If English is not your first-language consider using a professional editing service
- Ask colleagues to proof-read your work
- Consider attending a writing workshop
- Your piece should present a detailed analysis rather than a simple narrative or commentary on a list of cases or legislation
- Make sure your argument flows logically, using clear headings to break up the text
- Take time to check your citations thoroughly
- Ensure you are happy that your article is complete, do not expect to finesse your text or add additional material at a later stage
- Once you have chosen a journal to submit to, follow that journal's instructions for authors or style guide to ensure the article is put into journal style (AJIL authors should follow The Chicago Manual of Style (16th ed. 2010), The Bluebook: A Uniform System of Citation (20th ed., 2015) and the AJIL Style Guide)
- Closely follow the submission instructions for your chosen journal (e.g. some sections of AJIL require submission by email, some via ScholarOne electronic submission system)
- Ensure you have adhered to any word limit for your selected journal (30,000 words for AJIL lead articles and 11,000 for shorter pieces)
- If a journal requires work to be anonymised, please eliminate any author details and anonymise any citations that refer to your own work
- If a journal has an exclusive submission policy, please abide by this (AJIL commits to faster review of exclusive submissions)
- Be confident, remember articles are double-blind reviewed and junior scholars therefore have the same opportunity to be published as senior scholars

If your article is accepted

- Your article may be rejected before or after review, accepted, accepted with revisions or you may be invited to revise and resubmit. Take any recommendations for revisions seriously
- Expect your article to be edited by the journal's editorial team – treat these edits constructively, they have been made to bring the best out of your article
- Note any special requests (for example AJIL asks accepted authors to provide source materials for their quotes and certain citations via Dropbox within two weeks of acceptance)
- Respond to any queries from the editorial team or any copyeditor promptly
- Be ready to check proofs quickly (AJIL gives just three days for this process)
- Proof corrections should be limited to typos and errors of law, substantial changes to your article are not allowed by any journal at this stage
- Expect to be asked to transfer your copyright to the journal and complete any documentation relating to this with care
- Check the re-use and self-archiving policy of the journal carefully before considering re-publishing or archiving in a repository

If your article is rejected

AJIL receives 400 submissions each year for Lead Articles, Notes and Current Development pieces and only a tiny percentage of these are accepted so do not be discouraged by a rejection:

- Take on board any feedback then submit to another journal
- Do not rule out sending a different piece to the journal in the future

For more information see cambridge.org/core/journals/american-journal-of-international-law/information/instructions-contributors

International Law: General Sources: Outline

This guide lists essential sources for researching general aspects of international law. For specialized topics, such as human rights and international arbitration, see the guide International Law: Specialized Sources.

Outline	Getting started--classics, encyclopedias, databases, etc.	Books, Ebooks, Working Papers, etc.
Law reviews, journals, articles	News, blogs & paper/note topics
Abbreviation dictionaries & citation manuals	Sources of IL, I.C.J. Statute, U.N. Charter	Treaties
United States treaties	Customary IL & state practice	General principles
Teachings of the most highly qualified publicists	International Law Commission	International organizations
Expert & scholarly organizations	Statistics	Westlaw, Lexis+, HeinOnline, & Bloomberg Law
Other research guides	International Law: Specialized Sources	Foreign law

Guide Outline

To navigate this guide, use the tabs and dropdown tabs above or the links below. If you have additional questions, please visit or contact the NYU Law Library Reference Desk, Jeanne.Rehberg@nyu.edu or Sarah.Jaramillo@nyu.edu.

- Getting started--classics, encyclopedias, databases, etc.
- Books, Ebooks, Working papers, etc.
- Law reviews, journals, articles
- News, blogs & paper/note topics
- Abbreviation dictionaries & citation manuals
- Sources, I.C.J. Statute, U.N. Charter
- Treaties
- United States treaties
- Customary IL & state practice
- General principles
- Case law/jurisprudence
- Teachings of the publicists
- International Law Commission
- International organizations
- Expert & scholarly organizations
- Statistics
- Westlaw, LexisAdvance & HeinOnline
- Other research guides
- International Law: Specialized Sources
- Foreign law

Databases

This guide provides links to a variety of databases, several of which are limited to NYU Law faculty and students. Information for NYU Law students and faculty on obtaining passwords for Westlaw, Lexis Advance and Bloomberg is available here.

Last Updated: Sep 15, 2020 10:40 AM | URL: <https://nyulaw.libguides.com/international-law> |  Print Page

Login to LibApps

Subjects: International Law Tags: foreign & international law, international law

AMERICAN JOURNAL OF INTERNATIONAL LAW

VOL. 95

October 2001

NO. 4

CONTENTS

Traditional and Modern Approaches to Customary International Law:

A Reconciliation

Anthea Elizabeth Roberts

757

There are two contemporary approaches to the determination of customary international law: the "traditional," which emphasizes state practice, and the "modern," which emphasizes opinio juris. This article proposes a theory of custom that incorporates both approaches. It rejects analyzing custom on a "sliding scale" in favor of a reflective interpretive approach that reconciles the descriptive and normative justifications for traditional and modern custom.

Vol. 112

April 2018

Specially-Affected States and the Formation of Custom

Kevin Jon Heller

191

Although the United States has relied on the ICJ's doctrine of specially-affected states to claim that it and other powerful states in the Global North play a privileged role in the formation of customary international law, the doctrine itself has never been systematically developed by the ICJ or by legal scholars. This article fills that lacuna by addressing two questions: (1) what makes a state "specially affected"?; and (2) what is the importance of a state qualifying as "specially affected" for the formation of custom? It concludes that a theoretically coherent understanding of the doctrine would give states in the Global South significant power over custom formation.

VOL. 108

January 2014

NO. 1

CONTENTS

PAGE

The Decay of Consent: International Law in an Age of Global Public Goods

Nico Krisch

1

International law's consent-based structure is often seen as inadequate for solving global public goods problems. Many commentators therefore project a turn toward nonconsensualism. This article focuses on three issue areas—international antitrust, climate change, and terrorism financing—to analyze whether we can observe such a turn. In the picture that emerges, international law retains much of its consensual character but is increasingly sidelined in favor of other, especially informal and unilateral, modes of governance in which consent plays a more limited role and hierarchy is often pronounced.

AMERICAN JOURNAL OF INTERNATIONAL LAW

Vol. 111

October 2017

No. 4

CONTENTS

PAGE

The Outer Limits of the Continental Shelf Under Customary International Law

Kevin A. Baumert

827

"Seldom has an apparent major change in international law been accomplished by peaceful means more rapidly and amidst more general acquiescence and approval," Lauterpacht observed of continental shelf claims nearly seventy years ago. When considered today, this observation merits a caveat, as the question of how far the continental shelf extends into the sea is not yet fully settled. This article explores the customary international law applicable for determining continental shelf limits and also examines the legal procedures used by states to gain international acceptance of those limits.

The New Debate on the Interpretation of MFN Clauses in Investment Treaties: Putting the Brakes on Multilateralization

Simon Batifort and J. Benton Heath

873

This article challenges the conventional wisdom that MFN clauses in investment treaties can always be used to "import" substantive standards of treatment (e.g. FET). It argues that most tribunals permitting this use of MFN clauses have relied on presumptions and have ignored meaningful variations among clauses. It also points out that states are increasingly questioning the conventional view, and that a recent arbitral award has firmly rejected an attempt to use an MFN clause to import substantive standards. It concludes by sketching the terms of the new MFN debate.

Notes and Comments

MFN Clauses as Bilateral Commitments to Multilateralism:

A Reply to Simon Batifort and J. Benton Heath
Shakespeare: A Dove, a Hawk, or Simply a Humanist?
Presidential Tariff Authority

Stephan W. Schill

914

Theodor Meron

936

John K. Veroneau and

Catherine H. Gibson

957

Current Developments

Crimes Against Humanity and Other Topics: The Sixty-Ninth Session of the International Law Commission

Sean D. Murphy

970

THE CHAPEAU OF THE GENERAL EXCEPTIONS IN THE WTO GATT AND GATS AGREEMENTS: A RECONSTRUCTION

*By Lorand Bartels

One of the most important issues in the law of the World Trade Organization is the right of WTO members to adopt measures for nontrade purposes. In the WTO's General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT 1994) and General Agreement on Trade in Services (GATS), this right is secured in general exceptions provisions,¹ which permit WTO members to adopt measures to achieve certain objectives, notwithstanding any other provisions of these agreements and also, in some cases, other WTO agreements.² These objectives include, most importantly, the protection of public morals, the maintenance of public order,³ the protection of human, animal, or plant life or health, the enforcement of certain domestic laws, and the conservation of exhaustible natural resources.⁴

The right to adopt measures for these purposes is subject to various conditions, some of which are specific to the objective at issue. For example, a measure for conserving exhaustible natural resources needs to "relate to" that objective and be "made effective in conjunction with domestic restrictions on production or consumption of those resources,"⁵ whereas a measure

* University of Cambridge. Email: lab53@cam.ac.uk. I would like to thank James Flett, Catherine Gascoigne, Joanna Gomula, Simon Lester, Gracia Marín Durán, Odette Murray, Laura Nielsen, Federico Ortino, Joost Pauwelyn, Julia Qin, Frieder Roessler, Marie Wilke, Michelle Zhang, and the editors for their useful comments. Opinions and errors remain my own.

¹ General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade 1994, Art. XX, Apr. 15, 1994 [hereinafter GATT 1994], Marrakesh Agreement Establishing the World Trade Organization [hereinafter WTO Agreement], Annex 1A, 1867 UNTS 187; General Agreement on Trade in Services, Art. XIV, Apr. 15, 1994, WTO Agreement, supra, Annex 1B, 1869 UNTS 183 [hereinafter GATS]. WTO legal texts are available at https://www.wto.org/english/docs_e/legal_e/legal_e.htm and reprinted in The Legal Texts: The Results of the Uruguay Round of Multilateral Trade Negotiations (Cambridge University Press, 1999).

² The general exceptions also apply to obligations in related WTO agreements, sometimes expressly, as in the Agreement on Trade-Related Investment Measures, Art. 3, Apr. 15, 1994, WTO Agreement, supra note 1, Annex 1A, 1868 UNTS 186, and the Agreement on Trade Facilitation, Art. 24(7), WTO Doc. WT/L/931 (July 15, 2014) (not yet in force), and sometimes by implication, as in relation to certain obligations in accession protocols. See, e.g., Appellate Body Report, China—Measures Affecting Trade Rights and Distribution Services for Certain Publications and Audiovisual Entertainment Products, para. 415, WT/DS363/AB/R (adopted Jan. 19, 2010). Documents for WTO disputes are available at https://www.wto.org/english/tratop_e/dispu_e/dispu_e.htm#disputes.

³ This exception is not included in GATT 1994, supra note 1, Art. XX.

⁴ This last exception is not included in GATS, supra note 1, Art. XIV.

⁵ GATT 1994, supra note 1, Art. XX(g).

Vol. 111

July 2017

No. 3

CONTENTS

PAGE

The Survival of the Secret Treaty: Publicity, Secrecy, and Legality in the International Order

Megan Donaldson

575

This article offers the first detailed history of the norm of treaty publication as it has evolved over the last century. Drawing on both public debates and archives of foreign ministries, it traces how, and why, secret treaties have persisted, even in liberal democracies. It challenges assumptions of ever-greater transparency over time, and complicates the associations made—by interwar reformers and international lawyers today—between the norm of treaty publication and ideals of legality in the international order.

AMERICAN JOURNAL OF INTERNATIONAL LAW

VOL. 110

October 2016

NO. 4

CONTENTS

PAGE

Agora: Reflections on President Obama's War Powers Legacy	Curtis A. Bradley	625
President Obama's War Powers Legacy	Curtis A. Bradley and Jack L. Goldsmith	628
Obama's AUMF Legacy

The 2001 Authorization for Use of Military Force (AUMF) remains the principal legal foundation under U.S. domestic law for the president to use force against and detain members of terrorist organizations. This essay explains how the Obama administration established the AUMF as the legal foundation for indefinite conflict against Al Qaeda, associated groups, and the Islamic State. It also shows that the administration's claim that international law operated as an important constraint on its actions under the AUMF was belied, on a range of issues, by its interpretations of international law that supported presidential discretion and flexibility.

The Obama Administration, International Law, and Executive Minimalism	Ashley S. Deeks	646
---	------------------------	-----

The Bush administration took a maximalist approach to the jus ad bellum and jus in bello, staking out broad claims about what international law permitted in resorting to force and detaining and interrogating Al Qaeda members. In contrast, the Obama administration established more minimalist policies, which authorized a narrower scope of action than what international law permits. The Obama approach improved relations with allies and deferred difficult inter-agency debates. But it also incurred costs by slowing the development of international law and making it more difficult for other states to interpret the precedential value of U.S. actions.

The Obama Administration and Targeting "War-Sustaining" Objects in Noninternational Armed Conflict	Ryan Goodman	663
--	---------------------	-----

President Barack Obama embraced what many in the international law community long regarded as off-limits: targeting war-sustaining capabilities, like economic infrastructure used to generate revenue for an enemy's armed forces. Scholarly opinion generally maintains that such objects are not legitimate military targets, but the academic literature is highly deficient. Scholars have not grappled with the strongest and clearest evidence supporting the U.S. view. Indeed, intellectual resources may be better spent not on the question whether such objects are legitimate military targets, but on second-order questions including how to apply proportionality analysis and identify limiting principles to guard against slippery slopes.

VOL. 109

April 2015

NO. 2

CONTENTS

PAGE

The Crime of Aggression: The United States Perspective	Harold Hongju Koh and Todd F. Buchwald	257
--	---	-----

The 2010 Kampala Review Conference raised challenges for the Obama administration's reengagement with the International Criminal Court. The authors—leaders of the U.S. Kampala delegation—assess the treaty amendments adopted by the states parties. Those amendments could, after January 2017, enable the Court to exercise jurisdiction over the crime of aggression. As that period approaches, the authors consider key issues regarding the definition and nature of the crime, complementarity, state consent, the role of the Security Council, the conditions for amending the Rome Statute, and how best to prevent the important new jurisdiction over the crime of aggression from perversely chilling

AMERICAN JOURNAL OF INTERNATIONAL LAW

VOL. 93

April 1999

NO. 2

CONTENTS

	PAGE
Symposium on Method in International Law
Edited by Steven R. Ratner and Anne-Marie Slaughter
Appraising the Methods of International Law: A Prospectus for Readers Steven R. Ratner and Anne-Marie Slaughter	291
The Responsibility of Individuals for Human Rights Abuses in Internal Conflicts: A Positivist View Bruno Simma and Andreas L. Paulus	302
Policy-Oriented Jurisprudence and Human Rights Abuses in Internal Conflict: Toward a World Public Order of Human Dignity Siegfried Wiessner and Andrew R. Willard	316
New International Legal Process Mary Ellen O'Connell	334
Letter to the Editors of the Symposium Martti Koskenniemi	351
International Relations Theory, International Law, and the Regime Governing Atrocities in Internal Conflicts Kenneth W. Abbott	361
Feminist Methods in International Law Hilary Charlesworth	379
The Law and Economics of Humanitarian Law Violations in Internal Conflict Jeffrey L. Dunoff and Joel P. Trachtman	394
The Method Is the Message Anne-Marie Slaughter and Steven R. Ratner	410

VOL. 109

April 2015

Editorial Comment Economic "Necessity" in International Law	Alan O. Sykes 296
--	--------------------------

VOL. 108

April 2014

Remedying Disregard in Global Regulatory Governance: Accountability, Participation, and Responsiveness Richard B. Stewart	211
--	-----

In exercising their growing powers, the myriad specialized global regulatory bodies tend systematically to disregard the interest and concerns of less powerful groups and individuals, causing them significant harms and deprivations. Important gaps in global regulation also leave the disregarded without vital protections. The article presents a new analytical taxonomy of governance mechanisms—decision rules, accountability mechanisms, and other regard-promoting measures—to diagnose the institutional roots of these injustices and provide a conceptual platform for global governance reform.

VOL. 109

October 2015

The Rule of Law Without the Rule of Lawyers? Why Investment Arbitrators Are from Mars, Trade Adjudicators from Venus Joost Pauwelyn	761
--	-----

Notwithstanding regime convergence, trade and investment disputes continue to be decided by two strikingly different groups of individuals. The differences between these groups, and the design features that have led to this differentiation, are here examined empirically. The deciders are indeed "faceless diplomats" in the WTO and "elite lawyers" in ICSID. The differences in adjudicators, in turn, have influenced not only the functioning of the trade and investment regimes, but also perceptions of them. Without the rule of private sector lawyers, WTO would be unable to achieve some rule of law; by contrast, investor-state

Customary International Law: A Third World Perspective

B. S. Chimni

1

The article offers an alternative account of the evolution, formation, and function of customary international law (CIL) from a third world perspective. It argues that there is an intimate link between the rise, consolidation, and expansion of capitalism in Europe since the nineteenth century and the development of CIL that is concealed by the supposed distinction between "formal" and "material" sources of CIL. In fact, both "traditional" and "modern" CIL sustain the short-term and systemic interests of global capitalism. It proposes a "postmodern" conception of CIL that would contribute to the global common good.

AMERICAN JOURNAL OF INTERNATIONAL LAW

VOL. 109

July 2015

NO. 3

CONTENTS

PAGE

Exploring Comparative International Law

This symposium explores the possibilities of "comparative international law": as a field, a cluster of inquiries using comparative methods, or a set of approaches to aspects of international law. These articles frame this inquiry, examine issues of methodology, discuss the uses and limits of comparative materials in adumbrations of general principles of (international) law and in analyses of customary international law and treaty law, and present comparative multicountry research on international law in national legal systems.

Comparative International Law: Framing the Field

Anthea Roberts, Paul B. Stephan, Pierre-Hugues Verdier, and Mila Versteeg

467

How to Select and Develop International Law Case Studies: Lessons from Comparative Law and Comparative Politics

Katerina Linos

475

Comparative International Law at the ICTY: The General Principles Experiment

Neha Jain

486

Comparative International Law Within, Not Against, International Law: Lessons from the International Law Commission

Mathias Forteau

498

International Law in National Legal Systems: An Empirical Investigation

Pierre-Hugues Verdier and Mila Versteeg

514

Why Do National Court Judges Refer to Human Rights Treaties? A Comparative International Law Analysis of CEDAW

Christopher McCrudden

534

NOTES AND COMMENTS

INTERNATIONAL LAW IN CHINESE COURTS DURING THE RISE OF CHINA

By Congyan Cai*

I. INTRODUCTION

The number of countries in which domestic courts are actively engaged with major public affairs has increased markedly since the early 1990s. In many transitional states, in particular, domestic courts have ruled on great constitutional controversies, which influence the national political process.¹ They have also taken an active role in the application of international law—especially human rights treaties—and at times treat such treaties as a “New Standard of Civilization.”² In particular, domestic courts have at times invoked international law in becoming more aggressive toward the executive branch.³ This trend has been one normative element inspiring some theorists to propose a new field known as comparative international law.⁴ This article highlights a different set of elements that become manifest in assessing the rapid overall rise in references to, and application of, international law by courts in China in recent years.

While human rights treaties, a frequent focus of Western international lawyers when assessing practices of national courts, have hardly been applied by Chinese courts (which leads Nollkaemper to place Chinese courts and the courts of Afghanistan, Cuba, Iran, and North Korea in a group that he derides as playing “no role whatsoever in fulfilling” the protection of the international rule of law⁵), Chinese courts have significantly increased their application of international law over the past three decades, a trend that can be expected to accelerate. In contrast to existing research on the application of international law by Chinese courts, which focuses on purely textual analysis or case description and, more importantly, fails to explore the public policy underlying the courts’ structural application of international law,⁶ this article

* Professor of International Law, Xiamen University School of Law. This article is an additional contribution of the Symposium: Exploring Comparative International Law published in the American Journal of International Law (Vol. 109, No. 3, 2015).

¹ See generally, CONSEQUENTIAL COURTS: JUDICIAL ROLES IN GLOBAL PERSPECTIVE (Diana Kapiszewski, Gordon Silverstein & Robert A. Kagan eds., 2013).

² See Jack Donnelly, Human Rights: A New Standard of Civilization?, 74 INT’L AFF. 1 (1998).

³ See THE ROLE OF DOMESTIC COURTS IN TREATY ENFORCEMENT (David Sloss ed., 2009); SHARON WEBB, THE ROLE OF NATIONAL COURTS IN APPLYING INTERNATIONAL HUMANITARIAN LAW (2014).

⁴ See Symposium, Exploring Comparative International Law, 109 AJIL 467–550 (2015); Anthea Roberts, Comparative International Law? The Role of National Courts in Creating and Enforcing International Law, 60 INT’L & COMP. L.Q. 57 (2011).

⁵ ANDRÉ NOLLKAEMPER, NATIONAL COURTS AND THE INTERNATIONAL RULE OF LAW 13, 55 (2011).

⁶ See DAI RUIJUN (戴瑞君), GUOJI RENQUAN TIAOYUE DE GUONEI SHIYONG YANJIU: QUANQU SHIYE (国际人权条约的国内适用研究: 全球视野) [DOMESTIC IMPLEMENTATION OF INTERNATIONAL HUMAN

THE EMERGING RIGHT TO DEMOCRATIC GOVERNANCE

By Thomas M. Franck*

Legitimacy in 1991 flows not from the barrel of a gun but from the will of the people.

U.S. Secretary of State James A. Baker III

I know what real democracy is, what democracy is worth.

A thirty-seven-year-old Soviet lieutenant colonel who early on sided with anticoup forces†

I. INTRODUCTION: THE POWER OF DEMOCRATIC LEGITIMACY

More than two centuries have elapsed since the signatories of the U.S. Declaration of Independence sought to manifest two radical propositions. The first is that governments, instituted to secure the "unalienable rights" of their citizens, derive "their just powers from the consent of the governed." We may call this the "democratic entitlement." The second proposition, perhaps less noted by commentators, is that a nation earns "separate and equal station" in the community of states by demonstrating "a decent respect to the opinions of mankind." The authors of the Declaration apparently believed that the legitimacy of the new Confederation of American States was not made evident solely by the transfer of power from Britain but also needed to be acknowledged by "mankind." This we may perceive as a prescient glimpse of the legitimating power of the community of nations.

For two hundred years, these two notions have remained a radical vision. The purpose of this essay is to demonstrate that the radical vision, while not yet fully word made law, is rapidly becoming, in our time, a normative rule of the international system. In the process, the two notions have merged. Increasingly, governments recognize that their legitimacy depends on meeting a normative expectation of the community of states. This recognition has led to the emergence of a community expectation: that those who seek the validation of their empowerment patently govern with the consent of the governed. Democracy, thus, is on the way to becoming a global entitlement, one that increasingly will be promoted and protected by collective international processes.

II. THE VALIDATION OF GOVERNANCE

Two recent events underscore this trend. The failure of the August coup in the Soviet Union, an event of inestimable human, political and historic import, demonstrates—for those sensitive to trends—that democracy is beginning to be seen as the sine qua non for validating governance. While President Boris Yeltsin of the Russian Republic and many Soviet citizens deserve primary credit for this

* Editor in Chief. The author wishes to express warm appreciation to many members of the Board of Editors for their helpful comments, as well as Paul Szasz, Robert Crouse, Gregory Fox, Dennis Sughrue, and the members of my honors seminar at the NYU Center for International Studies. Special thanks are due to the Filomen D'Agostino and Max E. Greenberg Research Fund of New York University School of Law.

† N.Y. Times, Aug. 22, 1991, at A15, col. 6; and id., Aug. 21, 1991, at A9, col. 1.

TOWARDS RELATIVE NORMATIVITY IN INTERNATIONAL LAW?

By Prosper Weil*

1. The purpose of this article is to examine, even at the risk of magnifying them somewhat for clarity, the potential dangers that some recent developments usually studied from other angles—the jus cogens theory, the distinction between international crimes and international delicts, the concept of a rule of general international law, the notion of obligation erga omnes—bring in their wake for the future of international law as a normative system intended to perform certain functions.

I. PATHOLOGY OF THE INTERNATIONAL NORMATIVE SYSTEM

2. As an uncontroversial starting point, let us take the statement that "public international law is the aggregate of the legal norms governing international relations."¹ This shows that the concept of international law is defined by both its nature and its functions. Its nature is to be an "aggregate of the legal norms" that dictate what its subjects must do (prescriptive norms), must not do (prohibitive norms), or may do (permissive norms) and constitute for them a source of legal rights and obligations. Its functions lie in "governing international relations." International law is therefore at once a "normative order" and a "factor of social organization."² These two facets are obviously interdependent. Thus, while the emergence of international law as a "normative order" is due to the need to fulfill certain functions, it will not be capable of actually fulfilling them unless it constitutes a normative order of good quality. In other words, the capacity of the international legal order to attain the objectives it was set up for will largely depend on the quality of its constituent norms. There can therefore be no indifference in regard to anything affecting international legal norms, since without norms of good quality international law would become a defective tool.

The Structural Weaknesses

3. As everyone knows, the international normative system, given the specific structure of the society it is called on to govern, is less elaborate and more rudimentary than domestic legal orders—which, of course, does not mean that it is their inferior or less "legal" than they: it is just different.

* Professor of Law, University of Paris.

This article is a modified and slightly expanded version in English of one published in 86 REV. GÉNÉRALE DROIT INT'L PUBLIC 5 (1982). It appears by kind permission of the editors and publisher of the Revue Générale.

¹ P. GUGGENHEIM, TRAITÉ DE DROIT INTERNATIONAL PUBLIC 1 (2d ed. 1967): "le droit international public est l'ensemble des normes juridiques qui règlent les relations internationales."

² C. ROUSSEAU, DROIT INTERNATIONAL PUBLIC 25-26 (1971).

LAWYERS, JUDGES, AND THE MAKING OF A TRANSNATIONAL CONSTITUTION

By Eric Stein*

Tucked away in the fairyland Duchy of Luxembourg and blessed, until recently, with benign neglect by the powers that be and the mass media, the Court of Justice of the European Communities has fashioned a constitutional framework for a federal-type structure in Europe. From its inception a mere quarter of a century ago, the Court has construed the European Community Treaties in a constitutional mode rather than employing the traditional international law methodology. Proceeding from its fragile jurisdictional base, the Court has arrogated to itself the ultimate authority to draw the line between Community law and national law. Moreover, it has established and obtained acceptance of the broad principle of direct integration of Community law into the national legal orders of the member states and of the supremacy of Community law within its limited but expanding area of competence over any conflicting national law.

The European judicial process, characterized by a symbiotic relationship between national courts and the Court of Justice, is a complex dialectic process—even more intricate than that of a divided-power national judicial system such as in a federation. A great variety of participants interact in a number of fora, but the dominant groups are clearly the legal elite:

1. The judges of the Court of Justice, acting as a collegium.¹
2. The Advocates General of the Court, "officers of the Court" assigned the principal task of stating in a public session their personal, independent opinion for the benefit of the Court, not unlike the Commissaires du Gouvernement at the French Conseil d'Etat.
3. The Legal Service of the executive Commission of the Communities, headed by the Director General, which determines the position of the Commission as plaintiff, defendant, or "amicus curiae" before the Court.²
4. The Legal Counsel and Director General at the Council of Ministers with his staff, performing corresponding tasks for the ministers and for the complex committee system under the Committee of the Permanent Representatives.
5. Lawyers in the national ministries and other offices of the member states, who advise their governments, and in effect formulate the positions

* Of the Board of Editors. I wish to acknowledge with appreciation the research assistance of Sabine Hackspiel, Cologne University, LL.M. University of Michigan.

A version of this article was prepared as a contribution to a volume in honor of Prof. Dr. Konrad Zweigert, Director of the Max Planck Institute for Foreign and Private International Law in Hamburg.

¹ No dissenting or other separate opinions are allowed.

² On the use of the term "amicus curiae" in this paper, see the penultimate paragraph of note 3 infra.

FEMINIST APPROACHES TO INTERNATIONAL LAW

By Hilary Charlesworth, Christine Chinkin and Shelley Wright*

I. INTRODUCTION

The development of feminist jurisprudence in recent years has made a rich and fruitful contribution to legal theory. Few areas of domestic law have avoided the scrutiny of feminist writers, who have exposed the gender bias of apparently neutral systems of rules.¹ A central feature of many western theories about law is that the law is an autonomous entity, distinct from the society it regulates. A legal system is regarded as different from a political or economic system, for example, because it operates on the basis of abstract rationality, and is thus universally applicable and capable of achieving neutrality and objectivity.² These attributes are held to give the law its special authority. More radical theories have challenged this abstract rationalism, arguing that legal analysis cannot be separated from the political, economic, historical and cultural context in which people live. Some theorists argue that the law functions as a system of beliefs that make social, political and economic inequalities appear natural.³ Feminist jurisprudence builds on certain aspects of this critical strain in legal thought.⁴ It is much more focused and concrete, however, and derives its theoretical force from immediate experience of the role of the legal system in creating and perpetuating the unequal position of women.

There is no single school of feminist jurisprudence. Most feminists would agree that a diversity of voices is not only valuable, but essential, and that the search for, or belief in, one view, one voice is unlikely to capture the reality of women's experience or gender inequality. "One true story" cannot be told, and the promise is of "the permanent partiality of feminist inquiry."⁵ As Nancy Hartsock has

* Senior Lecturer, University of Melbourne Law School; Senior Lecturer, University of Sydney Law School; and Lecturer, University of Sydney Law School, respectively. The first version of this paper was presented at the Australian National University's International Law Seminar in May 1989. We thank Graeme Coss of the University of Sydney Law School for his excellent research assistance and our colleagues Hilary Astor, Andrew Byrnes and Jenny Morgan, who all made very helpful comments on our work in progress.

¹ See, e.g., Olsen, The Family and the Market, 96 HARV. L. REV. 1497 (1983); Karst, Women's Constitution, 1984 DUKE L.J. 447; Lahey & Salter, Corporate Law in Legal Theory and Legal Scholarship: From Classicism to Feminism, 23 OSCOODE HALL L.J. 543 (1985); Scales, The Emergence of Feminist Jurisprudence: An Essay, 95 YALE L.J. 1373 (1986); Minow, The Supreme Court October 1986 Term—Justice Engendered, 101 HARV. L. REV. 47 (1987); Grbich, The Position of Women in Family Dealing: the Australian Case, 15 INT'L J. SOC. L. 309 (1987); Bender, A Lawyer's Primer on Feminist Theory and Tort, 38 J. LEGAL EDUC. 3, 29–30 (1988); Bartlett, Feminist Legal Methods, 103 HARV. L. REV. 831 (1990); R. GRAYCAR & J. MORGAN, THE HIDDEN GENDER OF LAW (1990).

² See generally D. N. MACCORMICK, LEGAL REASONING AND LEGAL THEORY (1978); J. W. HARRIS, LEGAL PHILOSOPHIES (1980).

³ E.g., Gordon, New Developments in Legal Theory, in THE POLITICS OF LAW 281 (D. Kairys ed. 1982).

⁴ For a discussion of the major differences between feminist jurisprudence and the "liberal" and "critical" schools of jurisprudence, see West, Jurisprudence and Gender, 55 U. CHI. L. REV. 1 (1988); see also West, Feminism, Critical Social Theory and Law, 1989 U. CHI. LEGAL F. 59; Polan, Towards a Theory of Law and Patriarchy, in THE POLITICS OF LAW, supra note 3, at 294, 295–96.

⁵ S. HARDING, THE SCIENCE QUESTION IN FEMINISM 194 (1986); see also Bartlett, supra note 1, at 880–87.

613

VOL. 110

January 2016

Notes and Comments

Achieving Sex-Representative International Court Benches

Nienke Grossman

82

Law Book Proposal Guidelines

Thank you for your interest in submitting a proposal to the Academic Law team at Cambridge University Press. Please find some guidelines on the requirements for your submission as follows. These apply equally for monographs as well as edited collections (although for an edited collection please also include a draft introduction in addition to two draft chapters).

As part of your book proposal, please set out:

- Your reasons for writing this book and what it aims to do. Why is a book needed in this area at this time? State the draft book title.
- Its market and target audience (be as detailed as possible here, covering both the type of work/research the potential purchaser might be undertaking as well as jurisdictional appeal)
- Its "must have" value – why would somebody buy this book?
- A full table of contents with chapter titles. Please include detailed abstracts for each chapter.
- What is the expected overall length of the script in words, including footnotes and bibliography?
- What is the expected completion date of the manuscript for delivery to Cambridge?
- A note on competing books. Situate your book with regard to the literature in your discipline. Cover its potential position with regards to the existing Cambridge law list here too. What is the extra value of yours?
- If your proposal concerns a revised dissertation please enclose a revision plan for conversion to a book.
- Sample writing from the book itself, ideally at least two chapters. If your proposal concerns an edited collection, please also include the introduction.
- A note on the author's biography, listing relevant existing publications. If your proposal concerns an edited collection, please include a list of contributors, including their present affiliations.

Tom Randall
Commissioning Editor, Law
trandall@cambridge.org